California's Requirement for Food Safety Certification

The California Health and Safety Code, Section 113947.1 requires food facilities that prepare, handle, or serve non-prepackaged potentially hazardous food (PHF), except temporary food facilities, shall have at least one owner or employee who has successfully passed an examination from an accredited food protection manager certification organization. Once this person is certified, he/she is recognized as a Certified Food Protection Manager and the certification is valid for 5 years. Except for the certified food manager, all other food handlers, who prepare, handle, or serve non-prepackaged PHF, are required to obtain a food handler card. A food handler card is valid for 3 years. It is the duty of a certified food manager to ensure that all food handlers at the food facility have adequate food safety knowledge and training and perform their jobs pursuant to the health and safety requirements. It is also the responsibility of the certified food manager to provide continuous supervision, training and monitoring to ensure the food facility operate in a sanitary and safe manner. As a certified food manager, you can only act as the certified food manager for one food facility. Although you may work for more than one food facility but not in a certified food manager capacity. On the other hand, as a certified food handler, you may work for multiple food facilities. It is the responsibility of each food facility to maintain records of a certified food manager and certified food handlers throughout their employment with the food facility and provide records to the health department upon request. A food facility that starts a new operation, changes of ownership or no longer has a certified owner or employee will have 60 days from the date of the change to comply with the certified food manager requirement. A food handler shall obtain a food handler card within 30 days after the date of hire.

While training is not required to take the examination, many people find that training helps them pass the exam. The certification organization for a certified food manager must be accredited by the American National Standards Institute (ANSI) meeting the requirements of the Conference for Food Protection's "Standards for Accreditation of Food Protection Manager's Programs". Correspondingly, the certification organization for a certified food handler must be accredited by ANSI accredited training provider that meets International Standard Practice for Certificate Programs. Although Ventura County Environmental Health Division (EHD) does not provide certification training and testing, EHD does maintain a list of Certification Organizations and private individuals and companies who act as trainers and examination proctors for the certification examinations. This list is compiled from information given to EHD by these private individuals and companies. Please verify all information with the trainers and examination proctors when you make your reservation. The list does not act as an endorsement of any of the organizations or trainers and is maintained only as a courtesy to interested members of our community. Please make sure the examination you are given is one of those accredited by ANSI.

Most food safety providers are now providing both a certified food manager course as well as the certified food handler training course. You may find the accredited provider list through the internet link to the ANSI website.
